

The God In You
©2007 Joan Zen
All Rights Reserved

An untamed mind shall be typically unkind
Searching for answers it may never find
Revelations of the self
Start to understand the nature of this human with such sand
To sooth and calm the high living in the unburdened sky

With all the thoughts the mind it shall be taught
Swirling circles spin then like a shot
Letting go of all you know
Embrace the frantic space holding a cacophony at bay
For nothing is a place from where you can't escape

It's not okay to feel ashamed for what we do
Instead so be inclined to see the god in you
For if you know thyself as divine presence
The gift revealed to truly feel the God in you

An untrained mind it is constantly entwined
Thoughts running rampant finding every kind of distraction from the path
Creating karmic changes the soul wanting so arranges no pain
Suffering is a state from where we can relate

For all the spots on swinging on vines they seem to hop
The monkeys in the mind won't ever stop
Tangling up overgrown thoughts
Quiet little touch of grace filling up all of the chaotic space
For nothing is a place from where you can't escape

It's not okay for you to say it cannot be
Divinity resides inside the God in you and me
To surrender the self for the moment
So inspired your soul afire feeling the God in you